Panel 1:

European Unity and Economic Integration

For European governments providing for prosperity of citizens is closely tied to the aspiration of inclusive and democratic governance. With systemic shocks resulting in economic and social upheaval becoming more common, European countries will have to find ways to not only provide the material basis of their economies but also to protect against potential disruptions. As issues like climate, digitalization and social welfare systems change society, policy makers will need to keep up. Finding innovative solutions to challenges emanating from this new landscape while at the same time doing justice to the established system will in the coming years become central to European governance.
